CHARLESTON. THURSDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 21, 1867.

MEXICO.

Our readers will pardon us, we feel assured, if we have of late paid but little attention to affairs in the Empire Republic beyond the Rio Grande. The political situation at home has been a subject of continued anxiety, and there has been so little recently in the aspect of public affairs all over the United States, that could furnish any source for incere congratulation, that it is with a bad grace any American journal can address itself to the task of reviewing affairs in Mexico, and drawing infernces from its late history, disparaging or prejudiial to the descendants of the Aztecs, the Montezumas, or the later Spanish graft. But as the vires, within the last few days, have brought some mportant items of intelligence, some of them per haps mere rumors, we have thought a resume of ate events in that country may not prove uninteresting.

The condition of things in Mexico is amomalous While there is a party of the Church and a Libera party, and another that adheres to the Emperer's government; this division furnishes no real clue to the condition of things. The possession of political power is disputed by half a dozen or more military leaders, who cannot be sail to profess any principle (without doing great violence to the word,) but who are ready to oppose all adversaries by force of arms, and to shoot or banish any rival, whom fortune may deliver into their hands. There appears to be no "people" there, in our sense of that term. The more adventurous range themselves under one or other of the chiefs, the rest of the people are never heard of, except when they are forced to pay some heavy sum of money to an adverse chieftain. It is altogether curious, to find after nearly four centuries of European civilization, such an anomalous state of affairs, neither more nor less than actual brigan dage governing a large, populous and healthy country. Why such is the case is an enquiry foreign to our resent purpose.

The French troops, we learned by telegraph vesterday, have at last finally evacuated the city of Mexico. In the same issue yesterday, we also published the French Emperor's address to the orps Legislatif, on the re-assembling of that body. In it there is the following reference to the Mexican expedition:

"In another part of the globe we have been "In another part of the globe we have been obliged to employ force to repress legitimate grievances, and we have endeavored to raise an ancient empire. The happy results at first obtained were compromised by an inauspicious concurrence of circumstances." The guiding idea of the Mexican expedition was an elevated one; to regulate a people, and impart among them ideas of order and progress; to open vast outlets to our commerce; and leave the recognition of services rendered to civilization to mark our path. Such was; my desire and yours; but as soon as the extent of our saorthees appeared to me to exceed the tent of our sacrifices appeared to me to exceed the interests which had called us across the ocean, I determined, of my own accord, the recall of our army corps, in order that the Government of the United States might compretend that it was only the absence of conciliation in policy which had embittered relations. which, for the welfare of both countries, should remain friendly."

A most unfortunate faux pas, this, of His Im perial Majesty. This reference, finely drawn, and highly diplomatically ron-committal though it is, will not impose on any one. It will not heighten the respect for his government in the eyes of the United States. It will not soften the animosity, entertained by Maximilian and his friends, for fence" law for Montgomery county. The act makes such abandonment; nor will it soothe the irritation of the French people, who feel a double resent ment in connection with the Mexican expedition the great expense involved, and the terrible blow its failure has inflicted on the national prestige. It is a lame and impotent conclusion to a magnificent enterprise; and the end might have been different. The Emperor MAXIMILIAN, in his own justifica tion, and with a view of obtaining the moral support of the public opinion of Europe, has sent a circular to his diplomatic agents in Europe. He reminds the world that before he consented to asbutter which is "essence of June mornings caught sume the crown he stipulated that the nation he was invited to rule should be consulted, and he also received large promises of foreign support and of extraordinary means. A powerful alliance was guaranteed him by a solemn treaty. His resources, largely obtained in the form of a loan from France, melted away rapidly under the necessity of providing for the support of a very costly foreign army. The civil war, was protracted by reason of the presence of foreign troops. Before it had been possible to conceive the obstades, that presented themselves to the formstion of a sufficiently numerous Mexican army it was announced that the French proposed retiring before the stipulated time, and the concentration of their forces soon afterward commenced, leaving large districts abandoned to the inroads of the disaffected. This naturally had the effect of disheartening the Imperialists and of encouraging the Insurgents, and the civil war, which had begun to languish, quickly blazed up again. The Emperor MAXIMILIAN was informed that negotiations had been set on foot for the formation of an alliance between France and the United States, with the object of restoring peace and tranquility to Mexico, and that it had been laid down as a basis of such alliance that the Mexican Government should assume a republican form and a liberal character, hands of O'MAHONY, STEPHENS & Co., was $812,690. This was a very severe blow to MAXIMILIAN, and The amount of money upon which Roberts started to that numerous and respectable part of the Mex-his raid upon Canada was $126,000. trusting in his good intention and I opeful, that under his rule, days of happiness and prosperity might yet be in store for their long-distracted county. All such hopes were now frustrated, and Empire and with the integrity of the Mexican territory. The country was rapidly reverting to a state of anarchy. Encouraged by the prospect of plunder and bloodshed, the outlaws and brigands so plentiposition created for him by the desertion of his ally except resignation of the crown which that ally had, in the first instance, induced him to ccept. He resolved to restore to the nation the power it had placed in his hands. As a preliminary step to the carrying out of that intention, he convoked at Orizaba his Council of Ministers and the Council of State. Both those bodies strongly opposed his abdication, which they declared would lead to the ruin of the country, and urged him to organize the national army, and make efforts to maintain himself. It was suggested that a national congress on an ample basic should be convoked in order that it might decide what form of government the country desired, propose measures of organization, and adopt means of creating resources for carrying on the administration. The Council of State agreed to deliberate on these measures, and the Emperer consented to remain at on of the country. A manifesto was published

Tennessee; and have contracted for a portion of ports was expected to take the whole force away.

In the meantime several of the Mexican chiefs, who had linked their fortunes with the empire. were preparing to make a desperate struggle to save themselves. MARQUEZ and MIRAMON were most conspicuous in the new movement against JUAREZ. They were making forced loans, and MARQUEZ was most active in doing this in the City of Mexico, Puebla and Very Cruz. Men were being pressed into the service of these chiefs in the most rigorous manner, and sent forward to check the march of the Liberals towards the Capital. But hardly any one believes they would be successful, With all the efforts they were making their means and force were small. Their severe measures of impressment and forced loans would operate against them as soon as the Liberals approached. The opinion was general that both MARQUEZ and MIRAMON would soon have to fly from the country, not captured, to save themselves. And since then we have had a telegraphic dispatch announce ng the capture of MIRAMON. So also has the cap ure of Orreca been announced; and there certain y has been a rumor of the capture also of JUAREZ. It will be some time before we can hear the truth as regards affairs in Mexico; and still longer before such truth will be creditable to the people of that country, or pleasant to their friends, neighhora and well-wishers
